My Personal Cabinet

Directions:

Every President since George Washington has surrounded themselves with a group of trusted advisors called the Cabinet. The President's Cabinet members, called secretaries, are experts in their individual fields of study. As experts, they advise the President to help him or her choose the correct course of action.

George Washington had five members in his Cabinet. They advised him on issues like war, foreign relations, the economy, law, and even the mail. You are to choose five areas where you feel you could use advice on a daily basis. You are then going to take those five areas and make them into your own cabinet positions. After you create your cabinet positions, you will then need to choose five "experts" to be secretaries that will help guide your decision making on a daily basis.
